

Thank you for your contribution to open science!

Dear Matteo Della Porta,

As part of International Open Access Week 2022, we would like to celebrate the contribution you have made to open science.

At Elsevier, we believe that open science has the power to drive societal progress and advance the United Nations (UN) Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Making knowledge freely accessible to anyone, anywhere can play a fundamental role in achieving a sustainable and equitable future.

Between 2019–2021, you published an open access article with Elsevier, receiving a total of 3,842 downloads. Your article was linked to the UN SDGs, helping to tackle some of the world's greatest challenges.

Your top downloaded open access article linked to the SDGs was:

Article	Downloads	Sustainable Development
Going to the roots of reduced magnesium dietary intake: A tradeoff between climate changes and sources	3,842	SDG 13: Take urgent action to combat climate change and its impacts

To help you celebrate Open Access Week 2022, we have created a personalized certificate to mark your achievements which you can share with your colleagues and friends.

 Share your achievements on Twitter with just one click!

At the heart of the open access movement are millions of researchers, just like you, whose efforts enable us to create a more collaborative, inclusive, and transparent world of research.
